Adrian Arnold has been a vet for more than 55 years during which time he has treated exotic animals at Whipsnade Zoo, removed a tumour from a dog that was larger than the patient, pinned the thigh bone of a kindergarten hamster and removed a growth from the mouth of an iguana. There are suspected cases of foot-and-mouth disease and rabies which are challenges in themselves. He has established two veterinary practices which now confine themselves largely to the standard range of pets but he has worked with farm livestock delivering calves by Caesarean while dealing with clients with every conceivable reason for being unable to pay their bills. Stick insects, goldfish and eagles all appear in the anecdotes of veterinary life - most of which have a lesson to teach. He has known success and tragedies in his professional and family life while enjoying the full-hearted support of his wife, Jen, and their children. A few celebrities come and go as there are times when the human client benefits more than the patient they brought to the surgery. while he meets The book carries on where James Heriot left off looking back at veterinary practice of the 60s and 70s right up to the 21st century. Nostalgia for a disappearing age merges into an analysis of modern veterinary medicine - from German V-1 rockets to today's cancer chemotherapy. Having moved from East Anglia to Somerset to be nearer the grandchildren, he still dispenses veterinary advice to the local community which invariably suggests a visit to the local vet, Brain Injury Rehabilitation in Adults World Health Organization

This is an essential aid in the initial design and planning of a project. The relevant building type is located by a comprehensive index and cross reference system, a condensed commentary covers user requirements, planning criteria, basic dimensions and other considerations of function, siting aspect etc. A system of references based on an extensive bibliography supports the text. In every section plans, sections, site layouts, design details and graphs illustrated key aspects of a building type's design. Most illustrations are dimensioned or scaled - the metric system of measurement is used throughout, and the equivalent in feet/inches can easily be read either off a graphic scale on the page or from the built-in conversion table. The illustrations are international in origin and include both well know and less famous designers. Architects Data is primarily a handbook of building types rather than of construction techniques and details. However its treatment of components (such as doors and windows) and of spaces for building services is extremely thorough, since consideration of this data is an essential element of the planning process. The opening pages of basic data on man and his buildings cover critical subjects such as scale, drawing practice, noise, light and space for the same reason.
